

First-year German • Individual Project (Kontext 11)

“Einkaufen – Geschenke” • “Shopping & Gifts”

Description: Learn how to shop at a big department store by using their website. Find a gift for that “special person.”

Level: Context 11

Time: 4-5 hours over 14 days (2-3 hours for stage 1, 1-2 hours for stage 2); additional 30 minutes to 1 hour for optional stage 3. Some of this is web-surfing, NOT work!!

Due: Stage 1 is due 1 week from start of assignment (earlier is better, so you will have more help on stage 2). Stage 2 is due one week after your instructor returns your stage 1 to you.

Objectives

- 1) learn shopping terminology above the minimal survival level (“gift ideas,” “toys,” instead of just “How much?” and “pay”);
- 2) develop skills and vocabulary for describing everyday objects using language closely specific to a given object;
- 3) recall the conventions of writing about gift-giving (“I’ll treasure it always”) and consciously employ them when using the target language;
- 4) acquire skill of “stealing:” plugging own terms into framework provided by others, or plugging someone else’s terms into your framework
- 5) begin to internalize (feel, not consciously convert) currency (Euro) and other “foreign” quantities (clothing sizes);
- 6) soften up source of funds for your trip.

Summary of activities

- 1) explore on-line major German department store and a range of specialized shopping sites;
- 2) find and explore a shopping site that fits own special interests;
- 3) select a gift to give or have received, even if only “let’s pretend;”
- 3) compile two vocabulary lists: a) useful on-line shopping terms; b) “juicy” words for describing that special gift;
- 5) in German, write EITHER a thank-you note for that special gift you have received, OR a friendly note accompanying the gift you are sending to that special person (see details below under “Procedure”).
- 6) in English, write a message to that “special person” or another special person (your source of travel money?), telling how internet shopping can be done with German-language sites (see details below under “Procedure”).

Procedure

On steps 1-3 above (“Summary of Activities”), as you go along take notes about the specialized vocabulary of shopping in general, and the precise terms that are useful for describing something you particularly care about. You may also run into other useful resources, such as e-greeting-card facilities (“Grußkarte”) that can serve as models for the messages you will be writing.

- 1) On the internet, go to the home page of “Quelle,” the big German department store chain. The link is on the web page for this assignment, along with others for it. Spend about an hour exploring the Quelle site. This can easily be the main source of your specialized shopping vocabulary list. It may also provide the special gift from which you draw your list of specific terms that can be used to describe the gift. See worksheet for specific words and general kinds of words to look for. Try to learn what words mean by relating them to nearby words, rather than using a dictionary, an on-line translator or the site’s English version. That way you will learn the words more deeply. And besides, many modern words, especially those for popular commercial items, may not yet be in dictionaries.
- 2) Go to 3 of the specialized German-language shopping sites whose links are on the web page for this assignment. Note: Some of the sites include content (leather goods, hunting items, lingerie) that may be objectionable to some web-surfers. You will be able to tell that from the name and description of the site. If you think you might be offended, use other sites in the list – though anything might possibly be objectionable to someone somewhere. All the sites offer valuable cultural insights into the German-speaking world.
- 3) On your own now, find at least one German-language shopping site that carries gifts that you are particularly interested in, either so you can shop for a gift for someone else, or so that you can plant useful hints about a gift you would like to receive. Try combining “Geschenk” (gift) or “Geschenkartikel” (gift articles) with the German word for some special interest (examples: “Schach” [chess], “Krawatten” [neckties], “Motorrad” [motorcycle], “Kochen” or “Küche” [cooking, kitchen], or with some international word like “mp3” or “Mozart” or “Hip-Hop.” You can also search on the generic names of specific items, such as, “Daunendecke,” the word for those cozy soft down quilts they have.

NOTE: Along the way you may want to print out a few web pages as illustrations for either your gift note or your “online shopping in German” instruction sheet.

- 4) Use the worksheet to construct your specialized vocabulary lists and to list the websites which you visited and found useful, other than the “Quelle” site. Turn in your worksheet and any related material. THIS IS STAGE 1.
- 5) Decide which kind of German message you will be writing, EITHER a thank-you letter for a gift you have received, or a note of equivalent length that would accompany a gift you are presenting. Draft the message (see advice below, “What to put in your gift note”).
- 6) Compose your English message that tells about shopping on the internet in German. A reader who knows no German should be able, from the message, to repeat the major features of your experience.
- 7) Turn in your German and English messages and support materials. THIS IS STAGE 2.

Results, including things to hand in

Stage 1

- 1) 2 specialized vocabulary lists (10+ items each);
- 2) specialized list of web sites, consisting of those you visited from the list of suggestions we provided, and those you found on your own (see worksheet)

Stage 2

- 3) letter in German about the gift you received or are presenting (1/2 to 1 page);
- 4) one-page note in English that can serve as a basic “manual” for someone who knows no German but wants to explore on-line German-language shopping facilities;
- 5) kit of support materials (probably website printouts) that: a) help give a picture of the special gift, and b) help someone explore on-line German-language shopping facilities;
- 6) (the project as a whole: more support for your hoped-for trip to a German-speaking country).

What to put in your gift note

A special gift deserves a special note, whether you are thanking someone for a gift you received or are adding a note to accompany a gift you are sending. Aside from the obvious (“Thank you...” or “Here is a gift for you...”), we include many or all of the following kinds of content, and perhaps some other things as well:

- 1) an expression of thanks that is more effusive than just “thanks,” or similar elaboration about our giving;
- 2) a detailed description of the gift, even if it’s obvious what it is, so that it will be clear how appropriate the gift is (“It’s so delicate, and just the right color for our kitchen!”);
- 3) something special about the people involved, to show how appropriate the gift is (“How sweet that you remembered how much I hate chopping onions by hand!”);
- 4) something to show that coming up with the idea took some special thought, or that shopping for the gift involved something more than a fast trip to the supermarket (“I don’t know where you found kitchen canisters with the words for the contents in so many other languages”);
- 5) reference to how much, and maybe just how, the recipient will use and treasure the gift (“Every time I bake those special holiday cookies I’ll be thinking of you”);
- 6) some other content that suggests that saying “thank you,” or even presenting the gift, was not the sole reason for writing the note (“I do hope we can get together after the holidays”).

Note: Some of you love to attempt language at a very high level. That’s OK in general, but be aware that what you write may be strong on vocabulary but very weak in its resemblance to actual German. Be sure you use the resources that have been presented in the current Kontexte: the vocabulary, the sentence patterns, the specific structures. The projects do not ask you to do anything that requires language beyond the current resources and the special resources you are asked to develop for the project. Be especially careful of writing (or just thinking) your messages in English and then attempting to translate them.

Resources (other than basic textbook materials and all-purpose dictionary)

German-language WWW sites (or equivalent in print, if you can find them, for example from ads in a German-language newspaper or magazine). In reality, anyone shopping for specialized German-oriented gifts would almost certainly use the internet to find information and carry out transactions, so that’s an essential part of this project. To help you develop your language, look for sites that offer rich descriptive information rather than just brief headings and lists. Sites with good visual materials will help you understand the language.

Need help with a gift idea?

Think Christmas stuff (toys, cookies); special foods and beverages; goose-down comforters; lederhosen and alpine hats; folk-music and classical music; heritage items (pictures of the ancestral town, etc.)
